NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT.

A more or less direct attempt is being made in certain quarters to represent the critics of the Alberta and Great Waterways transaction as opposed to the opening up of the north country by railway construction. The spokesmen of this action are to be congratulated for their courage rather than for their candor or their sense of the ridiculous. It certainly requires some hardihood to tell people who have heard and read the criticisms offered to this bargain that the development of the north country is in some antagonism to the development of the north land. It certainly requires as much assurance to solemnly tell people who know that the north country is chiefly coming from the north country. Had that criticism come from Southern Alberta solely, or even in the main, it would have been more or less ignored. But it comes from the north country. Had that criticism come from the Province or from fear that the development of that portion would detract from the prosperity of the south. The excuse would even so have been a poor one, but it would have been better than none at all. And under the circumstances there is no excuse at all for raising the cry, and no reason save the hope of distracting attention from arguments which cannot be answered. Of the members of the Legislature in opposition to the transaction, one after Edmonton, one for Sturgeon, one for Pembina, and seven come from constituencies lying north of Red Deer. More, these are the men who began the criticism, and who stood the brunt of the fight in the House and in the press. Certainly if these men are to be considered as acting from antagonism to the north country they must be supposed to have parted with every vestige of business sense and political sagacity. They represent constituencies which more than any others in the Province stand to profit by the development of the north country. To suppose them as wanting to block the development of that country is to suppose them wanting to strike a blow at their own prosperity and the future of the people they represent, and to incur the hostility of the men whose votes put them in office. The Bulletin is not the first to be accused of antagonism toward the opening up and peopling of the north land. The history of the Bulletin in respect of the north country is a record of aid and fair-mindedness that it has been an immense boon to the country in the saving of a vast amount of money that would have been spent in industrial strife, in averting serious losses arising from the dislocation of industry and in preventing much suffering among the working classes. Up to the end of March last, eighty-two applications had been received for the appointment of boards of conciliation and investigation to enquire into the demands for wage increases, and that number seventy-four were accorded to and boards appointed. Sixty-eight cases out of the seventy-four the enquiries resulted either in a direct agreement between the parties or in such an understanding in the relations as led to the termination of the strike. It is not our own failures of the Act to avert strife were the dispute between the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and its mechanical employees, and the projected strike of the Dominion Coal Company and the Cumberland Railway and Coal Company.

In the year ending March 31st last thirty disputes were brought under the notice of the Minister of Labor, and there were only four cases among the number in which the strikes were not either averted or ended. In all the remaining disputes the investigation resulted in agreements between the parties or in a smoothing away of the causes of strife. Apart from these direct advantages that have resulted from the act has done by clearing the industrial atmosphere, and by leading to a better understanding between employers and employees, it has come to be regarded as a fine arbitration tribunal. The Minister of Labor may appoint to deal with disputes of the largest kind, as those affecting public utilities, almost invariably are, and thus as providing a means by which serious injury to important interests, dispiriting among workmen and their families, and, consequently, even suffering to the public may be avoided.

THE SUCCESS OF THE LEMIEUX ACT.

Montreal Herald: The Lemieux Industrial Disputes Investigation Act has now been in force for three years and any impartial review of its work during this period would have to concede that it has been a most successful one. It has been an immense boon to the country in the saving of a vast amount of money that would have been spent in industrial strife, in averting serious losses arising from the dislocation of industry and in preventing much suffering among the working classes. Up to the end of March last, eighty-two applications had been received for the appointment of boards of conciliation and investigation to enquire into the demands for wage increases, and that number seventy-four were accorded to and boards appointed. Sixty-eight cases out of the seventy-four the enquiries resulted either in a direct agreement between the parties or in such an understanding in the relations as led to the termination of the strike. It is not our own failures of the Act to avert strife were the dispute between the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and its mechanical employees, and the projected strike of the Dominion Coal Company and the Cumberland Railway and Coal Company.

In the year ending March 31st last thirty disputes were brought under the notice of the Minister of Labor, and there were only four cases among the number in which the strikes were not either averted or ended. NEW GOVT. ROAD AGAIN UNDER FIRE

Opposition Mags. Mr. Lumsden's Allegations the Basis for General Attack on the Enterprises.

Special Correspondence.
Ottawa, April 29.—Further attempt to create political sentiment favorable to the Conservative party was made by the opposition in the House of Commons today. The building of the Grand Trunk Pacific railroad was made the vehicle and the time-worn allegations and insinuations of a conservative cast and graft figured conspicuously in the debate on the opposition side, for which speeches which occupied over six hours of the time of the House at the rate of 22 a minute were made by Messrs. Lennox and McGrath and Leader Borden.

The attack proper was an attempt to frighten the country by exaggerated talk concerning the alleged cost of the road which it was sought to instill in the mind of the public in the form of a story by somebody. It was vague and indefinite either as to where there was any waste or who was getting the rake-off but that there was a colored individual taking some where in the neighborhood of the wood pile it was necessary to mention. The speaker, Mr. Lennox, endeavored to convince the country that its interests were being properly guarded by the Liberal government. The foundation for this particular attack on the government was the resignation of Mr. Lumsden, formerly railway engineer for the Transcontinental railway company, who, it will be remembered, alleged in his letter of resignation that his boss for no reason that he had lost confidence in his subordinate engineers, from which the opposition set up an inference that the position of the railway was being held on the table of the House, the premier himself moved for a committee to investigate.

While the Lumsden charges supplied the ground work for the opposition, the ground work for a real commission to investigate everything in connection with the construction of the Grand Trunk Pacific, upon which the debate was based, the contention of the opposition speakers was that the government had misled the country by representations that the road would cost a given sum to build while in a matter of fact it actually cost a great deal more.

The attack was replied to by the minister of railways and canals, Mr. Girouard, and Mr. McInnis, member for Pelly, who, in their remarks clearly delineated the position of the government to be that the cost of the road could be built in this country should be corrected, that if the circumstances required that kind of a policy of the government is that the best road that can be built in this country should be built in this country. It is frankly admitted there is a considerable difference between the original estimate of cost and what it is actually costing, but the difference between the original estimate and the actual cost is due to the fact that the original estimate contemplated the building of an ordinary road and the increased cost is due to the decision to build a road of the highest standard to be found on the continent.

In building such a road through a new and practically unknown country, close estimates of the cost could not be made in advance. As in any waste of money or likelihood that there can be any graft or wrong doing in any way, that is guaranteed against in this way. The Grand Trunk Pacific Company leases and operates the road and pays to the government three per cent on the actual cost of construction. Both the government and the Grand Trunk have their own officials to supervise construction and watch the expenditure and provision is made for arbitration when the two sets of engineers disagree, so that the country is not dependent upon the honesty of the government or its officials for keeping the road within reasonable bounds, but upon the self interest of the Grand Trunk Pacific Company.

Minister Girouard put the point of the matter clearly before the country when he pointed out that the foundation upon which the demand for an investigation by Royal Commission had been destroyed by the report of the Lumsden committee and that the position of the government was to build the best railroad on the continent, the purpose of which was to carry commerce between ports and thereby make Canada the greatest country in the Empire. As against that policy and that purpose, he declared, attack like the one in question, being made, not with any design to safeguard the interests of the people, but solely to serve the interests of the Conservative party as a means of organization, could have but one effect, that of hampering the government in its efforts to accomplish its great purpose.

The evident readiness on the part of the railways and their employees to have recourse to conciliation boards is one of the most healthy symptoms of the usefulness of the Act.
